Lecture summary:

William Hogarth (1697-1764) was the most important British artist of his generation, equally outstanding as a painter and an engraver. He had an immense reputation as an artist and a personality in his own day, and his work has hardly gone out of fashion, though it can be hard to appreciate how novel it originally appeared. He is best known for his “Modern Moral Subjects” – fully elaborated pictorial narratives which enact a complete story of contemporary London life. These include A Harlot’s Progress, A Rake’s Progress and Marriage à-la-mode. The novelist Henry Fielding called Hogarth a “comic history painter”, inventing an entirely appropriate new category for his friend. “Comic” and “moral” are good adjectives to describe his work since he did not preach virtue but satirized vice and folly. He could never remain serious for very long; as Horace Walpole noted, “the burlesque turn of his mind mixed itself with the most serious subjects”.
